

If DTSC achieves its goal to reduce hazardous waste generated in California 50% by 2025, the state will still generate about 850,000 tons/yr. In other words, California will still need the capacity provided by the state's two existing hazardous waste landfills. Without the capacity provided by KHF, California will be far short of capacity needed even to handle the waste it generates after a 50% reduction.